Capital Partners

LIFE CONVERSATIONS. WEALTH SOLUTIONS.

OCTOBER 2023

Quarterly Market Update

Higher for longer

Capital Partners Investment Committee

Much of the support for equities over the year was driven by the market's belief that the 'terminal rate' for this cycle of interest rates has been reached, and that the central banks would start cutting rates as soon as the end of this year. Contributing to this narrative was data showing inflation continue to decline and a better than expected earnings season.

However, as the end of quarter approached, stocks came off their highs and bond yields continued to rise as both the Federal Reserve in the US and the RBA emphasized that rates would remain higher for longer. The message is now coming in loud and clear that the central banks are not planning on a rapid policy pivot as many were expecting.

The Australian stock market is up 13.5 per cent for the previous 12 months, but much of that performance came from the last quarter of last year and the first quarter of this year. In the September quarter the ASX 200 Index is down by nearly 1 per cent. The IT sector is down by nearly 6 per cent for the quarter as the expectation of higher interest rates affected growth stocks.

Developed Markets are up 17 per cent for the 12 months, driven by the large US technology stocks. But as the "higher for longer" narrative takes hold, these technology stocks have borne the brunt of selling, with the S&P 500 Information Technology Index down by more than 10 per cent from its July high.

For bond investors the pain is likely to continue, as traders are expecting further yield increases as the "higher for longer" message seeps in. Complicating the global fight against inflation is the unwelcome surge in oil prices and the fact that economies remain resilient.

Against the backdrop of continued rate increases the bond market continues to signal that the US will end up in recession, along with the Eurozone, which will also markedly slow Australia's economic activity. China's economic slowdown after the post-pandemic rebound is also contributing to the gloom about next year's prospects.

However, as we have seen throughout the year, economic predictions have very little bearing on what markets will do over the next quarter or the next year.

Equity and bond market overview

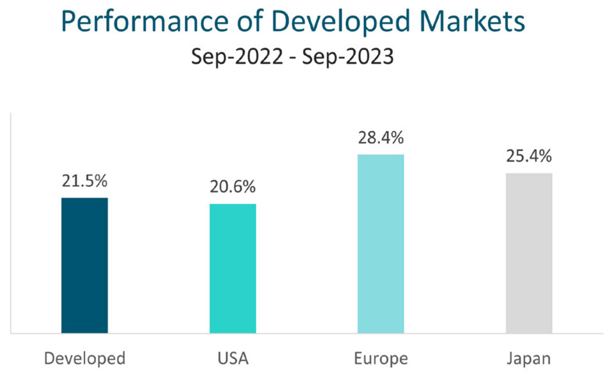
ASX flat for the quarter

The Australian stock market, represented by the S&P/ASX 200 index, has been flat for the quarter. This was driven by pressure from surging oil prices, inflationary risks and rallying government bond yields. Furthermore, retail cooled faster than expected in August. The market is up over 12 per cent for the 12 months, but most of these gains came from the last quarter of 2022.

Source: www.investing.com

Developed markets have ignored higher rates

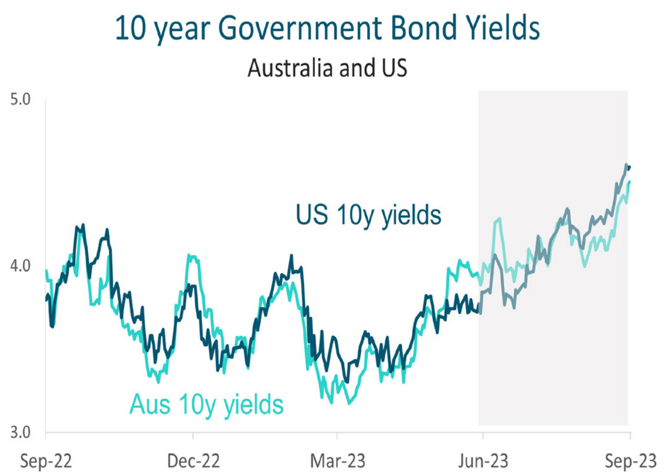
The stock market rally in the first half of 2023 was built on the back of technology stocks, as investors bet on resilient consumers and hype surrounding AI. However continued emphasis by central banks that rates will stay higher for longer has sapped some of the risk appetite for equities. Like Australia, most developed markets are trading flat for this quarter.



Source: FE Analytics

Yields keep rising on continuing high inflation

Australia's 10-year government bond yield hit its strongest levels since December 2013 and tracked a rally in global bond yields amid expectations that major central banks will keep interest rates higher for longer. Despite recently pausing rate increases, both the RBA and US Federal Reserve have indicated that continuing inflation may support the case for future rate increases.

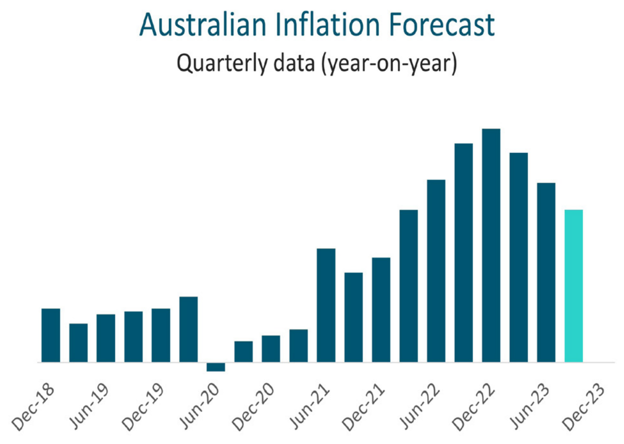


Source: www.investing.com

Economic review and forecasts

Inflation continues to fall but remains above target

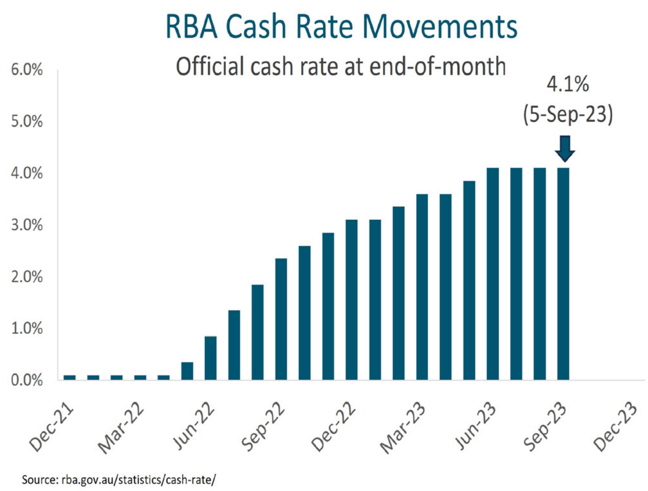
The Consumer Price Index (CPI) indicator rose 5.2 per cent in the 12 months to August 2023, according to the latest data from the Australian Bureau of Statistics, which is up from 4.9 per cent in July. The RBA reiterated concerns that services price inflation was surprisingly persistent, keeping expectations of higher interest rates alive.



Source: www.tradingeconomics.com/australia/

Interest rate hikes may not be over just yet

As inflation continues its downward trend, the RBA remains in a wait and see mode and has kept interest rates at 4.1% for the last four meetings. The RBA continues to signal that some further tightening of monetary policy may be required to ensure that inflation returns to target in a reasonable timeframe, but that will continue to depend upon the data and the evolving assessment of risks.



Source: www.rba.gov.au/cash-rate/

Australia remains on track for a soft landing

The Australian economy expanded by a soft 0.4 per cent growth in the June quarter. Underneath the aggregate economic figures are contrasting trends that will both please and concern the RBA. Consumer spending is weakening and helping reduce inflation. However, wages are picking up while labour productivity continues to decline, pushing up the cost of producing goods and services.

Source: www.tradingeconomics.com/australia/

Market returns

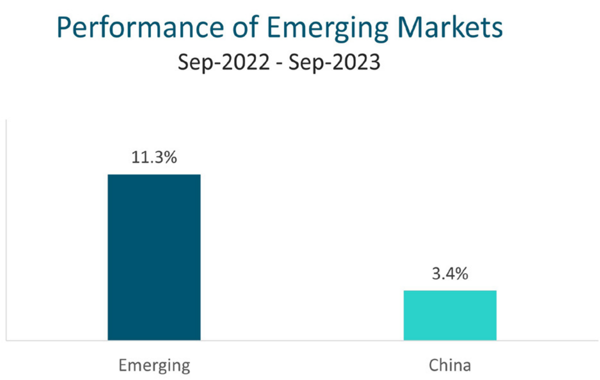
Asset Class	Year to Date	3 Months	1 Year	3 Year	5 Year	10 Year
Cash	2.8%	1.1%	3.6%	1.4%	1.3%	1.7%
Australian Bonds	1.2%	-0.3%	1.6%	-3.9%	0.3%	2.3%
Global Bonds	-0.3%	-2.4%	0.3%	-4.6%	-0.3%	2.2%
Australian Equity	3.7%	-0.8%	13.5%	11.0%	6.7%	7.4%
Developed Markets	17.0%	-0.4%	21.6%	11.9%	9.8%	12.5%
Developed Markets (hedged)	11.6%	-2.7%	19.6%	8.3%	6.7%	9.6%
Emerging Markets	7.0%	0.1%	11.3%	1.8%	2.9%	5.9%
Australian REITS	0.9%	-2.9%	12.5%	4.7%	2.5%	7.3%
Global REITs	0.3%	-3.6%	1.6%	5.8%	2.3%	7.0%

Interesting points

- Despite the fastest rate rises in a generation, equity markets have rallied over the last 12 months, even though much of the performance has been driven by a handful of large tech stocks in the US on hype around artificial intelligence.
- This market support has fallen away in the last few weeks of the quarter as central banks see rates staying higher for longer and flagging consumer confidence triggered a sell-off, with tech stocks falling by more than 10 per cent.
- Most equity markets have now fallen back to levels seen at the start of the quarter.
- Inflation remains sticky and even resurgent, thanks in part to a 30 per cent rise in oil prices since late June, which has seen bond yields continue to rise on the expectation of more rate rises ahead.
- The higher income from bonds is offsetting the rise in yields and bonds have delivered positive returns over the last 12 months.
- Emerging Markets continue to lag developed markets, principally because of the poor performance of China and the effect of a strong US dollar.
- REITs are now more correlated to the broader risk market than has been the case since the pandemic.

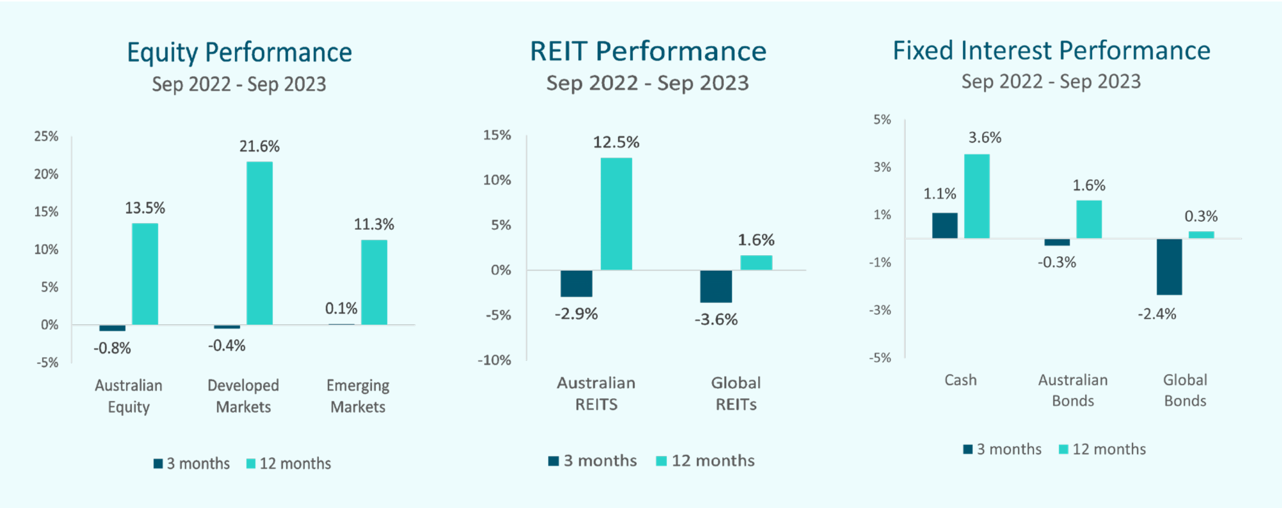
China drags down the emerging markets

The world's second-largest economy is facing a host of problems - including slower growth, high youth unemployment and a property sector debt crisis that has rattled global markets. The US credit rating agency Fitch said last month that China's slowdown was "casting a shadow over global growth prospects" and downgraded its forecast for the entire world in 2024.



Source: www.investing.com

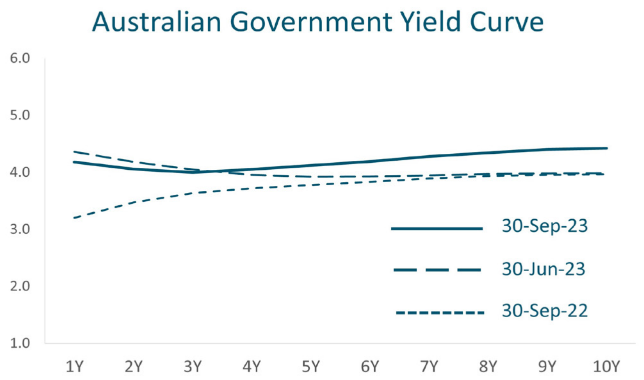
Market returns (chart)



Yield curves

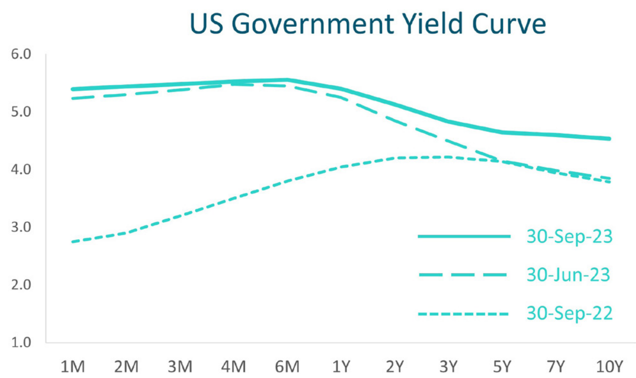
Australia

Short end yields came down slightly over the quarter as the market continued to assess inflation data and whether the RBA would keep rates on hold for a prolonged period. However longer yields rose, with the 10-year government bond yield rising above 4.4 per cent, hitting its strongest levels since December 2013 amid expectations that rates would stay higher for longer.



United States

The US yield curve remains inverted despite the slowing of inflation and the economy remaining resilient in the face of higher interest rates. Most economists now favour the soft landing scenario as more likely, although some still see a hard landing as inevitable as the Fed signals there are one or two more rate increases to come.



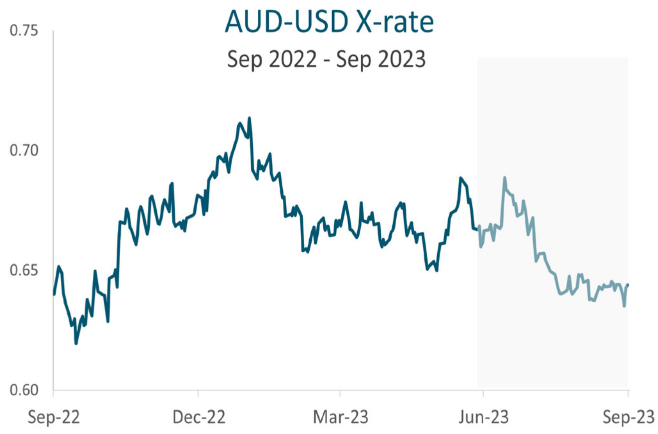
Source: www.investing.com

Currency and commodities

Exchange rate

The Australian dollar was down 3.5 per cent for the quarter and closed at 0.64 US dollars in a period marked by constantly shifting outlooks for interest rates.

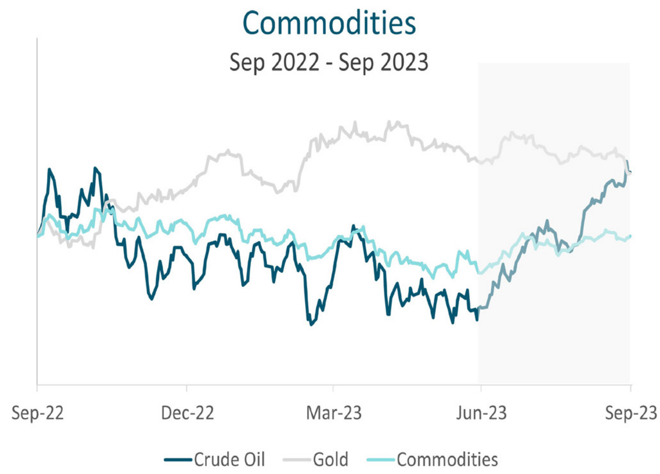
While markets consider inflation data, the Aussie remained under pressure from a hawkish outlook on US Federal Reserve monetary policy.



Commodities

In the last quarter the commodity index is up over 6 per cent. Gold is down by 2.6 per cent and near its lowest levels in 6 months, pressured by a strong US dollar and rallying Treasury yields.

Crude oil is up over 30 per cent for the quarter fanned by tightening global supplies and declining crude inventories in the US.



Source: www.investing.com

This article was produced by the Capital Partners Investment Committee in collaboration with insight from Dr Steve Garth, Principal of Principia Investment Consultants PHD, M.App.Fin., BSc., BA.

Capital Partners

PRIVATE WEALTH ADVISERS

22 Delhi Street West Perth WA 6005	+61 8 6163 6100 capital-partners.com.au

© 2023 Capital Partners Consulting Pty Ltd ABN 27 086 670 788
Australian Financial Services Licence 227148

Disclaimer: This information is of a general nature only and may not be relevant to your particular circumstances. The circumstances of each investor are different and you should seek advice from a financial adviser who can consider if the strategies and products are right for you.